Riquezes

E-Mail: sylvia@sylviariquezes.com Website: www.sylviariquezes.com

"Tic Tac Toe or a Political Game?"

Tic Tac Toe or A Political Game it's a piece that reflects our economic, political and social restlessness. Shows the traditional Tic Tac Toe game board with the world map as a background. Every game piece represents images, such as, Barak Obama and the United States of America, Hugo Chavez and Latin America, Osama Bin Laden and terrorist groups, petroleum as a resource, wall street as the economy, corruption, among others. These images are economic, political and social icons that take part in the real game of the world today.

For those who are familiar with the game of Tic Tac Toe it is evident that if both players know how to play the game, there will never be a winner. With this idea, the piece looks forward to demonstrate how the economic, political, and social world powers confront each other in reality. Each power, icon, element, I will dare to say the world in general, moves based on individual interest. It doesn't consider the common good and this forces us, in the game and in reality, to be losers.

Shows the Tic-tac-toe game board over the world map. Every game piece represents an economic, political and social icon that takes part in the real game of the world today. For those who are familiar with the game it's evident that if both players know how to play, there will never be a winner.